PARAGRAPHS CONCERNING MICHIGAN

Lansing, Mich., Nov. 13.—An echo of the devastating forest fires of 1921-22 was heard this week when the Almont Telephone Co., of the Thumb district appealed to the Administrative Board for the cancellation of $2,000.00 back taxes. The storm wrecked the lines during the disturbances since then the man who founded the company died, and bankruptcy faces the company if it has to pay the back taxes, a petition with 34 signers sets forth. The request was referred to the budget committee of the board and meanwhile an investigation will be made to determine if the rumors are true that the Michigan State Telephone company is anxious to buy the line and is back of the request to have the taxes cancelled.

Since the State started its paid trapper system and its campaign to exterminate predatory animals and birds on April 1, 1921, there have been slain 280 wolves, 1,206 coyotes, 160 bobcats, 1,888 fox, 7 lynx, 700 weasel, 1,081 porcupine, 1,407 woodchucks, 5,228 crows, 4,092 hawks, 770 owls. Under the old bounty system the state would have had to pay for wolves alone the sum of $52,010.

Utility companies in Michigan will not be compelled to spend over $750,000 to make an appraisal of their properties for the benefit of the League of Michigan Municipalities. The commission held against the league in its request on the grounds there was no necessity for the appraisal as there is no general demand for any radical rate changes. An appraisal made by the companies is in existence now.

Forest fire fighters will now receive pay for their work at once and for only such time as they actually spend therein. Director Baird has invented a sort of I. O. U. voucher on behalf of the Department and has arranged with banks to honor them and then send the vouchers to Lansing for collection. The men are paid for their actual working hours at the rate of $4.00 per day.

DID YOU KNOW THAT:
Most of the 52,000,000 pounds of commercial fish marketed in this state last year were shipped east. The average price received was 15 cents per pound. The consumers paid three times that much.

Approximately 25,232 bakeries are operating in the United States with an average value of products estimated at $1,400,000,000.

Last year's value of boots and shoes made in this state is placed around $1,500,000.

There are 6,273 places in Michigan where dogs are sold while the state has around 2,500 retail drug stores.

According to reports filed by county treasurers there are close to 90,000 licensed dogs in Michigan while the license fee collected is around $225,000.

Fifty counties last year reported damage done by dogs to livestock which totaled $33,700.

Disease among animals at the numerous fox breeding places in Michigan is receiving strict attention from the department of Agriculture.

An average of about 100 swine per year are imported into the state for breeding purposes.

The cattle population of Allegan county is around 40,000; Clinton, 32,000; Eaton, 32,000; Huron, 31,000; Crawford, 14,000; Ionia, 33,000; Jossco, 9,200; Iron, 4,752; Mason, 13,000; Genesee, 25,000; Monroe, 28,000; Otsego, 1,100; Oscoda, 2,800; Roscommon, 1,400.

Michigan each year produces more than 100 million pounds of condensed milk. Michigan's milk consumption per year is around 688,000,000 pounds of milk.

This state has about 6,000,000 acres of fertile, unimproved land from which the forests have been removed.
During the spring about 117,500 gallons of adulterated vinegar were seized by state officials. There are about 325 cider and vinegar mills in Michigan ranging from small custom presses to large factories. In vinegar production Michigan ranks sixth in the Union.
There are 215 fishing enterprises operating in Michigan waters taking commercial fish.
Michigan usually ranks second or third in apple production.

THE COVERED WAGON

(Paramount)
Time 2 hours and 15 minutes.

Fully deserving the much abused term, "epic" this is one of the greatest pictures in the history of the screen, not so much for what it shows as for the spiritual content. The dauntless courage that led the settlers ever westward along perilous trails in an unbroken wilderness has never been more fittingly portrayed than here. The story, drawn from Emerson Hough's novel of the same name, deals with a band of "covered wagon" pioneers pressing toward Oregon, hampered by dissension within and unfriendly wilderness without. The incidents in themselves are not important, and we have a real sense of the tremendous sweep of the action. There is a romance and a pathos in the thin line of "prairie schooners" making their way slowly across an uncharted continent that cannot find expression in words. The director James Cruze has succeeded in transferring to the screen the pioneer spirit itself, and it invests the slightest action with a deep significance.

No person can fail to be a better and more appreciative American for having seen it. There are a few drinking scenes and such minor incidents not especially suited to the child mind, but they are wholly overshadowed by the great lesson in the spirit of early America to be learned here.

Lois Wilson and J. Warren Kerrigan appear in leading roles. The story is the story of the head of the band, and Ernest Torrence and Tully Marshall create the outstanding characterizations as two plainsmen and scouts. Taken from the People's Home Journal, October issue.

FINE ARMISTICE DAY CELEBRATION

PARADE OF FLOATS AND CIVIC BODIES.

General Wilson, Guest of Honor Gives Fine Address.

It was just six years ago at 11:00 o'clock a. m. last Tuesday, November 11th that an armistice agreement was signed between the nations of the Central government and the allied nations, then engaged in the World war. It was the signal for hostilities that had existed for more than four years to cease. Everywhere there was great rejoicing. The news flashed to all corners of the earth, and even the nations not engaged in the gigantic conflict joined in the rejoicing.

In America every city and every hamlet and community was stirred in thankful gratitude. Every community was represented at the battle front and it meant that there was to be no more conflict and no more precious lives sacrificed in the great cause of principle and honor for which America fought.

In Grayling industrial operations were stopped and the streets were soon alive with people and hundreds of hearts poured forth their deepest gratitude and thanks. And there was universal rejoicing everywhere. Those who were in our fair city that afternoon and evening will long remember the event. Flags were unfurled, firearms of every description were brot into display. That evening there was a magnificent parade, headed by the Grayling band and followed by just about every person in town who was able to march and carry a flag. And in the city at that time there were scores of cases of flu and a visit to the Hospital was made by the paraders. It was "truly a great night and we are sure we shall never forget it, and shall be recorded as one of our most important memories."

The Sixth Anniversary.

The first celebration in Grayling of this memorable event was held Tuesday last, under auspices of Grayling Post No. 106 American Legion. The day started out mild and beautiful and lasted until after the parade at 2:00 p. m.

The parade started at the Hospital at that hour and passed down Michigan avenue and Maple street to the school house.

The Parade.

First came the colors, carried by Glen Wilcox, and at his side Burton Shaw carried the Legion banner, with Victor Peterson and Leon Huey as color guards. Sgt. Clarence Johnson was in charge. All were in uniform. Then following came an automobile in which rode General Guy M. Wilson, and the other speakers of the afternoon, Grayling Post No. 106 came next followed by the Grayling Citizens band, playing a patriotic air. The ladies of the W. R. C. carrying American flags followed, and then came a float, representing a graveyard in France, with its green sods bedded with poppies and white crosses, marking graves of American soldiers. It bore the following lettering: "Lest We Forget" and the name and number of the local Post.

It was planned to have the following transcription, "Lest we forget on Flanders Field the poppies grow" but were disappointed at the last moment in not being able to get a printer to print same. However it was a beautiful demonstration and attracted a lot of attention. A Red Cross float and a small float representing the W. R. C. and the fraternal organizations of Grayling followed in line. Grayling Lodge No. 424, M. No. 356, Grayling Council No. 108 of Columbus No. 1882, Grayling Lodge I. O. O. F. No. 141. The parade was witnessed by hundreds of people, automobiles being parked close to the curb on both sides of Michigan avenue and the streets were filled with people.

A program was given at the School auditorium immediately after the parade, which was in part as follows:

Patriotic Program.

Under direction of Miss LaSalle, director of music in our public schools, the audience sang a number of songs, beginning with the singing of America. Invocation was given by Rev. Baugh of the Methodist Memorial church.

Melvin A. Bates, chairman of the day, opened the speaking by stating the brief just what Armistice day meant, and that it is a holiday for the whole world.

Mrs. Roy Milnes sang a very enjoyable solo and was accompanied by Mrs. B. E. Smith at the piano.

T. W. Hanson made it plain that the Crawford county war board alone was not to be credited for the wonderful work that was done here during the war but instead every individual in the county was entitled to that credit, because of their excellent co-operation during those trying days.

He reminded the audience of the many farewell meetings that were held in that room when our quotas left for the front and cited many patriotic and heroic incidents. He closed his remarks with a fine tribute to the members of the G. A. R. and to the young men who served in the great war.

A song by the Girls' Glee club of the High school, under direction of Miss LaSalle also added greatly to the fine program.

Sgt. Harry Hemmingson, who served under Major Wilson in the 32nd Division in France and later in Germany, stirred up considerable patriotism in a few brief remarks addressed principally to his comrades present.

General Guy M. Wilson, who was major of the 32nd Division, commonly known as the Red Arrow division, under whose command were a number of Grayling boys, was the principal speaker of the afternoon.

General Wilson gave the best patriotic address that we believe we have ever been privileged to hear. He said, to him memories came thick and fast as his mind goes back to those days in France and Germany. And he impressed home the fact that everyone should have memory days, and "we unto the man who forgets his memory days." On such days he should re-consecrate himself and rededicate himself in the principles for which they stand. Memory days in general in America are such as the mistle day. He deplored the fact that people often forget the real significance of those days.

He mentioned some of the principal events that led up to the early settlement of America, then the Revolutionary war; the war of 1812, the Spanish war, the Civil war and finally the World War. He cited the fact that this is a peace-loving nation and that warfare is universally abhorred, but that we are a nation that stands ready at all times to defend our principles and our rights anywhere and everywhere.

He gave a brief resume of the events that finally led us into the World War. This nation had elected a president because "he kept us out of war and would continue to keep us out of war." However when General Wilson concluded that this nation would submit to their insults and infringement upon our rights and finally ruthlessly sent a torpedo against one of our vessels, carrying the American colors, she did not think that that country a world empire. Today in silent evidence of the defense of our rights and our honor, there now lie buried in Flanders field in France 100,000 fine American lads, a silent reminder of America's struggle for rightful liberty. America fought for a principle and principle only.

"I hate war," said General Wilson, "but still more I loathe the man or woman who will not give their best in the defense of their country. We don't want any more than did our early settlers, but like them, we MUST be prepared."

He made a most scathing attack upon the intolerance, saying "we have the right to think and to live and to worship as we like. I have no tolerance with those of religious intolerance. The price we paid for our liberty is too dear to be trampled under foot by any of our people."

The meeting closed with the singing of the Star Spangled Banner. It had been a most wonderful afternoon and nobody that was present can be anything but a better patriot for having heard the program.

Gen. Wilson Honored With Banquet.

Because of the large number that wished to attend the banquet at Shoppenhanger Inn that evening that was given by the members of Grayling Post of American Legion in honor of General Wilson, it was impossible to include the ladies of the community. The tables of this popular hostelry were nearly filled to the limit by ex-service men and their guests.

The dinner itself was superb, most delicious fried chicken being among the good things upon the menu. During the dinner excellent music was furnished by Schram's orchestra.

During the speaking program T. W. Hanson was the toastmaster. Those taking part in the talks were Alfred Hanson, commander of Grayling Post No. 106 American Legion; R. D. Conning, president of the Village; Sgt. Harry Hemmingson, Sgt. Clarence Johnson, Emil Giegling, M. A. Bates, chairman of the draft board during the war, and Gen. Guy M. Wilson.

Each had some good things to say. It was a serious meeting in many respects but one that was highly inspirational. Again Gen. Wilson delivered a most masterly address and left a message that will sink deep into the hearts of the ex-service men and of their guests of the evening.

Twenty percent of two highways for the ex-service men, one of which would lead to an early demise, while the other lead them thru paths of community usefulness and achievement and in the end longevity.

In his reminiscence the speaker told of some of the things that stood out prominently in the minds of the officers during their days at the front and especially during the time of the march of the American forces into Germany. It was very interesting and many incidents clearly portrayed the deep reverence in which he held the young men of his division. The policy that he carried out while in the service, he said, was "to give everybody a square meal and a square deal" which he said was a policy that could wisely be carried out in our every day lives. He admonished the young soldiers that as the older members of our communities must soon shift the responsibilities of our community to other shoulders, "yours is the duty to carry the torch as it is handed to you from feeble hands. You men get behind everything for the benefit of your community."

This, the first Armistice day celebration in Grayling in six years, was one of the best affairs we have had here in many years. It was admirably planned and a fitting ending to the members of Grayling Post deserve the highest praises for its success. And "lest we forget," it again reminded us that our duties to our soldiers are not yet discharged and never will be fully discharged.

This did not end the events of the celebration. For full measure the Legion gave a dance in the evening at the School gymnasium, free to all who cared to attend. It was a delightful party and a fitting ending to a perfect day. We are sure we bespeak the sentiments of the citizens of Crawford county when we extend our heartiest thanks to the members of Grayling Post for the wonderful day

FARM BUREAU NOTES

R. D. BAILEY, County Agricultural Agent.

Follow the Plains.

Professor C. B. Smith, chief of Co-Operative Extension work, Department of Agriculture, was a northern Michigan boy. He loves our north, and delights to return to it for a visit.

In a deeply appreciative mood he wrote the following beautiful lines under the title, "Fall on the Plains":

Alone on the Jack-pine plains
In October's golden haze,
With only the sound of the cricket
Droning his endless days.

The sun-shines warm on the golden rod,
The purple aster is still,
Not a leaf is ashen on the aspen tree,
Not a cloud hangs over the hill.

The ground-sparrow flits through the underbrush,
Not uttering a single sound;
The keen-eyed hawk in the azure sky
Floats in idle circles round.

The yellow and scarlet of the poplar and oak
Is there, your joy to awake,
With the reddening tinge of the blueberry bush,
And the mellow brown of the brake.

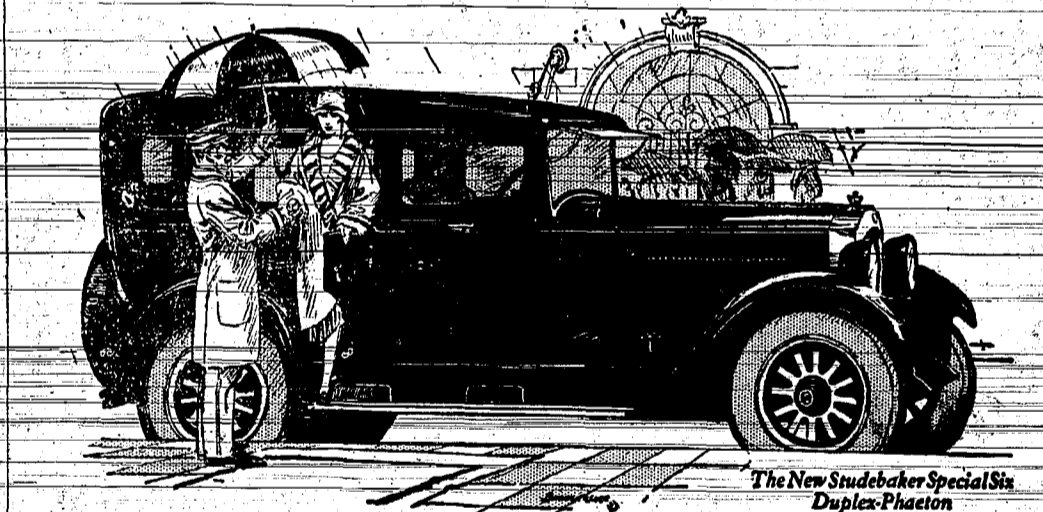

How idly stand on the open plain,
Contented quite with your lot,
And dreamily gaze on the silent world,
With all your cares forgot.

Learned Something.
I am sure that everyone who carefully looked the exhibits of potatoes over for an hour went away with a new idea of what a good potato looks like, and ought to make this better than the standard of what they deliver in Grayling.

They Don't Just Happen.
Clean, smooth, ideal potatoes don't just happen. They come because a man has heavily manured a clover, alfalfa or sweet clover sod, and plowed it late in the fall. In the spring he adds 200 pounds of acid phosphate and drags it in. He plants large seed that he has selected out of the best yielding hills when he was digging, in the fall before.

He soaks this seed thirty minutes, in the spring, in four ounces of corrosive sublimate dissolved in thirty

A QUARREL

SYNOPSIS.—Ellen and Joe Lathrop, orphans, who were brought to their home by their Aunt Elsie at Port Washington, small New York town. Ellen is studying art, her expenses being paid by Mrs. Sewall, a childhood friend of her mother. Mrs. Rose invites Ellen to a Thanksgiving house party and the girl is delighted. On the way from the station to Mrs. Rose's Ellen rides with a remarkably attractive young woman and a much older man. She takes them for father and daughter, but they are introduced as Mr. and Mrs. Josselyn. Ellen does not "fit in" with the younger members of the party, and is miserable. Leaving for her home next morning, Ellen meets Gibbs Josselyn, son of her fellow guest. He has "disappeared" from the wedding with the couple. Declining to stay at Mrs. Rose's, Gibbs drives Ellen to the station. They make a detour to the city and take a drive to the Port Washington. Their auto is wrecked. Ellen is hurt, but it is not thought to be serious and she is attracted by the girl and she by him. Ellen's injury proves to be severe, and for months she is in a hospital. Recovered, she is taking part in the town's Memorial day festivities when Gibbs Josselyn, on a yachting trip with a friend, comes to the city and meets her again. The feeling of mutual attraction has strengthened since they parted. They leave Port Washington and go to New York. Ellen Josselyn, with their son Tommy, come back from France by way of London. She and her beautiful wife, Lillian, the old girl-friend forgotten. Gibbs and Ellen make their home at the old house, just outside New York. Gibbs idles, ostensibly looking for a studio in which to resume his portrait painting.

CHAPTER VI—Continued

Gibbs did not attempt to repeat this conversation to his wife. To do so would be to give it an undesired importance. He told himself that there was really nothing to repeat, and yet he thought of it a hundred times during the next few days.

That night at dinner he had twice looked across the dinner table straight into Lillian's eyes, each time experiencing that faint, pleasant shock in his heart. He began to think of her, to wonder what thoughts her silence covered, to notice her silk-clad ankle or her white, ringed hand. Cadences in her voice began to linger with him, she made life more interesting for him in an instant, undefined sort of way. Living in the same house with her, he found so exquisite a setting for any friendship, began to seem like a scene in a play. She was always playing some part; it amused him to play an answering part of his own. He had never deceived Ellen. He was merely playing a vague little game that she would not have appreciated at its innocent worth, and that might stop, at any moment, leaving no one the worse.

Ellen had her own reserves, too, a tiny secret from Gibbs that worried her to an extent that she knew herself was entirely disproportionate. George Lathrop had taken the liberty of an old friend, and had advised her not to make her father-in-law's house her permanent home.

He had done it kindly, in the most brotherly manner, and without making it particularly emphatic, yet his earnestness had made Ellen vaguely uneasy, and she had not been quite happy since.

George had spoken on a certain beautiful May evening, when Ellen and Tommy, who had spent the day with her family in Port Washington, had come down to Sam's Point late in the afternoon to see Harriet. Reaching home a little earlier than usual, George came upon them at tea. Tommy was fidgeting about the garden on a golf stick, Ellen and Harriet were on the porch.

"Go telephone Lillian that I'm going to drive Ellen and Tommy home," George said to his daughter, "and put on a coat, baby, and come, too."

"Oh, now that's a lot of trouble!" Ellen protested. But the man, slipping his tea indifferently, merely smiled, and Harriet delightedly ran on to obey him.

"You're going to be with the Josselyns all summer?" he asked, after a silence.

"I suppose so," Ellen answered. "Gibbs' father idolizes Tommy. They're wonderfully kind about wanting us, and they don't let us mention any other arrangement."

"I think you make a mistake," George said flatly. "Ellen, who had been living in an atmosphere of honeyed sweetness of late, looked at him in quick and sensitive surprise."

"Of course Gibbs is looking for a studio in town," she said unconsciously. "Is it—is it—that you don't think it is right for Gibbs to let his father—well, support him?" she asked bravely. "That sounds like Joe's sister."

riety appearing at that moment, he held Ellen's blue coat for her, and watched her button it over her plain pongee gown. An hour later, when they were coming home, he asked Harriet about her. "You've taken a fancy to young Mrs. Josselyn, baby, haven't you?"

"Ellen? I love her!" Harriet responded enthusiastically. "Don't you think she's pretty, daddy, in her dear little way? Don't you think she has lovely blue eyes? I think she's a thousand times prettier than Lillian."

"Come now!" her father smiled. "Oh, daddy, I do! At least I think she's a million times sweeter than Lillian."

"Ah, well, that's a different thing, baby," he conceded with a sigh. But Harriet did not hear him.

"She doesn't seem to know how sweet she is, daddy. Now think of her coming over here twice a week to spend the day with Mrs. Baldwin. To-day, she was running about the water-front, talking with all those old men as happily as if she never had seen any other life. She's just like a little girl. Mrs. Baldwin will say to her: 'Put on that apron, Ellen, and she obeys as if she was eight years old.'"

"Which would be ashamed of the Lathrops if you were any relation to the baby?" her father asked, with a sideways grin. She laughed, flushed, and squeezed his arm in great felicity.

"Daddy, you're horrible!" she told him. And she added demurely: "You like Joe, don't you?"

"Who spoke of Joe?" her father asked innocently. "Joe what?" But Harriet would not permit this duplicity. She told him vividly that Joe was to come down to luncheon on Sunday, and they were to try the tennis, if there was no intervening rain.

To both father and daughter the lingering twilight of the season's first warm day was memorably sweet as they motored home. There were lilacs and fruit-blossoms in the village, doors were open, bareheaded women chatted had gone to their room to talk tirelessly, like children, to compare notes and exchange confidences. But they did this no longer. Gibbs was usually tired of talking on the brief occasions when he and his wife were alone. He talked at breakfast, talked while running into town in the car, met his old friends at noon and talked, came back to Wheatley Hills to be swept into the unending talk at the club, talked at dinner, and talked far into the night.

He would greet Ellen carelessly, and dress in silence. His life was full to the brim without her, all these lives were packed full without any particular reference to the claims of husbands and wives. Gibbs thought he was having a glorious time, he was excited, flattered, carried away by popularity. The men welcomed new blood, another rival on the links, another guest at cards, another eligible dinner guest, dancer, and raconteur. The women were all captivated by his unusual appearance, his easy French, his art, and his ambition. They found in his indifference a supreme charm. He did not play their game any more readily than his odd-burned little wife did, but while no man ever dreamed of taking the slightest liberty with domestic, serious, pretty little Mrs. Josselyn, half a dozen women at least would have been glad to be able to speak of Gibbs as a "suitor."

Lillian lazily called Ellen's attention to the petticoats that always fluttered across Gibbs' path at the club, to the intimate conversations for which traps were eternally laid beneath his wife's very eyes, and Ellen was filled with a sort of sick anger and terror. Anger because she did not want to fight for what was by all rights her own, and terror because sometimes she was smitten with the thought that she had nothing with which to hold him, should he try to go.

She could not be her old self in this environment. She no longer felt like the busy little wife and mother who had so gallily climbed up and down the heights of Mont-Saint-Etienne, Tommy-toddling beside her, Gibbs rushing to the landing to meet her, or to bid her farewell. Surely this was not the same Ellen who went into Yvonne's kitchen and mixed "Cornbread American" to the amusement and admiration of the sturdy Lilloise? Had she, only a year or two ago, been able to call cheerfully to Gibbs through a Brittany twilight that he must undress Tommy at once, the bath was waiting, and was it the same Gibbs who had obediently come across high grass under gnarled apple trees to present her with a warm, nude, dusty Tommy to bathe? Ah, and there were other things to remember: a night in a French hospital, and Gibbs' shining head against her arm on an immaculate counterpane, and the tiny cry that was so soon to be still, echoing through the gas-lighted, hot room.

But at this memory the thick tears would blind Ellen's eyes. She had mourned her baby, her delicate, wistful little Rose, but she looked back at that sorrow now as something so remote, something precious, something that had bound Gibbs and herself together more strongly than joy.

She would go into the nursery at "Villino dell'Orto," and begin to busy herself about Tommy's little person. Was he going to bed? Let mother undress him. She would fall into a deep slumber, and the little buttons and straps

"I can undress myself, mother!" Tommy would protest, wriggling. She would catch the young, bare little back to hers in a hunger of love. Perhaps the child would glance at her in surprise.

Are you crying, mother? What for?

"Indeed, I don't know, Tommy!" Their first real estrangement came this summer. Not that Ellen and Gibbs, as normal young persons, had not quarreled before. There had been occasions, in the very early days, when a fabled coldness in his tongue, or a letter that Ellen must write to Joe in the hour Gibbs wanted to read to her, had caused them acute wretchedness for hours or minutes that seemed like hours. And then there had been the day he whipped Tommy, after, as Ellen put it, deliberately goading a baby of less than four years into such a state of excitement that he didn't know whether he was telling the truth or not.

But this was different. Gibbs had taken a dislike to Joe and he and Ellen could hardly mention Joe without feeling. Gibbs told Ellen impatiently that Joe was all right, he might be a decent enough fellow and all that, but that he, Gibbs, did not like to have Joe choked down his throat all the time. Josselyn, Senior, was inclined to be hospitable to Ellen's brother, to bring him home to Sunday lunch, or to keep him for dinner after the Saturday tennis. George Lathrop was often at "Villino dell'Orto," and Harriet and Joe naturally drifted together. But Lillian, Ellen divined at once, did not like Joe. Joe had absolutely nothing to contribute to Lillian's life, and Ellen suspected that Lillian, in her languid and indirect manner, had influenced Gibbs without his knowing it.

One hot evening late in June Ellen went upstairs tired and exasperated after a wasted day. She had motored to Huntington with Lillian for a luncheon and bridge party, and had been talking and eating and laughing all day. Now her skin felt dry and hot, her head ached, and she was experiencing the exhaustion of a suddenly lessened tension. She had stopped at the nursery to find Lillian alone and sulky. Mr. Lathrop had not yet brought Tommy back. Yes, it was quarter past six.

Ellen went on to her own room to and Gibbs flung across the bed in one of the heavy naps with which he sometimes recruited his forces for the evening's demands. He rolled over when she came in, and lay there blinking and staring between yawns at the ceiling. "Time is it?" he asked presently, and when she told him he added: "D—n a seven o'clock dinner anyway! My head feels rotten!"

"You smoke too much!" Ellen suggested dispassionately.

He himself did not even admit it, and also admitted that he could not drink as steadily as the other men. But he acquiesced at this reminder. The truth was that late hours, rich food, hot weather, alcoholic stimulants, and the unnatural life they were leading were bad for them both, and any pretense would serve in these days for a quarrel.

"Where's Tommy?" Gibbs now asked. Ellen knew that he knew, and that he had deliberately selected a question that would imply a criticism of her management.

"Joe's coming over to dinner, Gibbs, with the Lathrops. And he isn't to dress, you know, for they've been out in the boat all afternoon. So I said not to bother to get Tommy home before seven, he can have a simple dinner and pop into bed as soon as he gets here."

Gibbs was now sitting on the edge of the bed with his silver hair in a mop over his flushed face, and his head in his hands.

"I must say I don't approve of this constant upsetting of Tommy's routine!" he observed.

Ellen, now at her dressing table, with the stiff lines of a silk robe falling about her, flushed in her turn.

"Last night you kept him up until quarter of eight," she answered lightly. She scored here, for Lillian had had friends for a later dinner the day before and had captured Tommy, and made him bring down his violin. The child had been reluctant to play the simple little air she knew, and Gibbs' paternal authority had been needed, and the threat of a whipping. Ellen had been excruciatingly uncomfortable during this scene, and had presently escaped with Tommy upstairs, almost as near tears as the child was.

"You simply said that to be nasty," Gibbs remarked with some heat. "You know the child is out too late, you know that no sensible mother would allow a child of six to go off in a yacht, and yet you deliberately permit—"

"There was nothing deliberate about it, Gibbs! Tommy and I went over to see Aunt Elsie this morning, in the small car. And Joe was home and asked to keep him. You know perfectly well—"

"I know perfectly well that my crazy thing that Joe proposes appeals to you! Anything to show me how absolutely indifferent you are to my wishes!"

"Gibbs, don't talk like that!" she said, in a changed tone, a tone more distressed than angry. Ordinarily, the faint indication of a desire to continue would have softened Gibbs, but he was still in the prickly discomfort of awakening after a daytime sleep, and he answered bitingly:

"Oh, don't let anything I say count! I'm not of course!" And as Ellen was silent with hurt tears in her eyes, he added grumblingly: "If George Lathrop wants Joe for a son-in-law, just because his daughter has set her heart on him, and if you want to see your brother every day, and three times a day—well and good! All I say is: I'm done!"

"It's Lillian that has set you against Joe!" Ellen burst out angrily. "I know the way she talks about him, in that pleasant, amused voice of hers! She made you think he was controlled and stupid and low, just because he's never fallen in love with her!"

"That's enough!" Gibbs said, in a stern voice. "Ellen, even as she spoke, he had a feeling that it was more than enough. She stopped speaking, ashamed and sulky, and went on with her indifference. There was a silence for the room for perhaps two minutes, and then Gibbs added with cold disapproval: 'After all Lillian has done for you—treating you absolutely like a sister—'

Then again there was a pause, broken this time by the entry of Joe and Tommy from the nursery through the bathroom.

Tommy had had supper on the yacht, it appeared. He was theoretically anxious to be allowed to stay up, actually his tired, sunburned little face were falling over his eyes. Ellen welcomed her little brother almost as warmly as she did her son. She put her arms about Joe's neck, and the silk sleeves slipped up to the shoulders. She knew Gibbs particularly resented Joe's manner of coming and going, informally to and from their rooms, but she could not be unkind to Joe to please Gibbs.

"If you don't mind, Joe—Ellen and I are dressing," Gibbs punished her by saying icily. Joe instantly apologetic, withdrew. The Josselyns did not speak to each other for the remainder of the period of dressing, nor, except when it was unavoidable, for several days.

The rift between the younger Josselyns has been opened and is widening. With it comes an open break?

Had Odd Affliction

In "Ten Years' Experience in a Sanatorium," published by the Medical Research Council, Sir St. Clair Thompson describes a case believed unique. An accountant was taken to the hospital suffering from an affliction of the throat believed to be tuberculosis. He was very husky, and was gradually losing his voice. Then the doctors noticed small black bodies about the size of mill seeds. Under the microscope they showed a fungus called aspergillus fumigatus, and such cured the patient. This disease is chiefly met with in birds. It has been found in ducks, geese, fowls, pigeons, pheasants, bustards, swans, flamingoes, jays, and golden plovers. Sir St. Clair Thompson declares that he had never known a case recognized and described in the literature before.

Thousands Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect It

Applicants for Insurance Should Use Swamp-Root

Judging from reports from druggists who are constantly in direct touch with the public, there is one preparation that has been very successful in overcoming these conditions. The mild and healing influence of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its remarkable record of success.

An examining physician for one of the prominent Life Insurance Companies, in an interview of the subject, made the astonishing statement that one reason why so many applicants for insurance are rejected is because kidney trouble is so common to the American people, and the large majority of those whose applications are declined do not even suspect that they have the disease. Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is on sale at all drug stores in bottles of two sizes, medium and large.

However, if you wish first to test this great preparation, send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing, be sure and mention this paper.—Advertisement.

Raleigh in North America

Queen Elizabeth's information for Raleigh kept him from going to Virginia with his first expedition for colonization. It is said that the queen promised to defray all expenses of the expedition if Raleigh would not go himself. The result was that Raleigh never saw the territory which is now the United States. But several years later, in 1585, Raleigh went to South America at the head of an expedition to conquer Guiana. On his way back to Europe he stopped in Newfoundland. This was the only time Raleigh ever set foot on the North American continent.—Lathrop, Magazine.

I have my housework to do and four babies to take care of so when I heard of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I took it and I feel better. My back don't bother me and I can eat more and work. I do all my housework and washing for six in the family. I will tell other women to take the Vegetable Compound and you may publish my letter." — Mrs. CHARLES F. DOLBEAR, 1201 Garber Ave., Lincoln, Nebraska.

Felt Better At Once

Volga City, Iowa. — "I will tell you how Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did for me. I was all run down and could hardly be on my feet. I was so cold I could not keep warm. I had numb feelings and then heat flashes would pass over my body. I had severe pains in my sides and was very nervous. I saw your advertisement in the newspapers so I thought I would try your medicine. My husband got me a bottle of the Vegetable Compound and I began to feel better as soon as I started taking it. I have taken it off and on for three years now. I keep house and do all my work for my husband and two little boys and make my garden. I feel fine and I tell others what the medicine has done for me. I think it is the best medicine in the world for women." — Mrs. THOMAS GARDNER, Volga City, Iowa.

Can Do Any Kind of Work

Fonke, Arkansas. — "I had the 'flu' and after that I had a pain in my side and was not able to do my work I was so weak. I found an advertisement in a paper and it told what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound would do, and I took it. Now I can do any kind of work I want to. I think every family ought to keep it in the house all the time and I intend to do so." — Mrs. DOXA PRUITT, R.R. No. 2, Fonke, Arkansas.

Over 100,000 women have so far replied to our question, "Have you received benefit from taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?" 98 per cent of these replies are "Yes."

This shows that 98 out of every 100 women who take this medicine for the ailments for which it is recommended are benefited by it.

This goes to prove that a medicine specialized for certain definite ailments—not a cure-all—can and does do good work. For sale by druggists everywhere.

JOHNSON HONORED BY FIVE NATIONS

Bolshevik battles, a czar of all the Russias murdered with his family in a lonely province town, the historic retreat of Czechoslovak forces from western Russia to the Pacific, clash after clash for five months with German and Austrian war prisoners and Russian Reds, cold, hunger, the slow withdrawal of allied troops with all the hardships of panic, food shortage, and broken-down transportation—all of these, woven together into the story of Col. B. O. Johnson, Legionnaire, make of it a veritable Arabian Nights tale.

Colonel Johnson, now resident at St. Paul, Minn., but formerly of Livingston, Mont., was appointed chairman of the transportation committee for the national convention of the American Legion. He is a vice president of the Northern Pacific railroad.

In the fall of 1917 Colonel Johnson went to Siberia as a member of a railway engineers' outfit to move military supplies from Vladivostok on the Pacific to the Russian front. Finding that the front was collapsing, he was sent with a few other American engineers to learn conditions. After 5,000 miles across north Asia, they learned that Russia was out of it and helped to move 50,000 Czechoslovak, Serb and Rumanian troops across Siberia to Vladivostok. For five months they battled with 600,000 enemy prisoners of war, aided by the Reds. The prisoners were returned to camps, the Trans-Siberian railroad was controlled and a way opened into Austria.

Colonel Johnson was with the Czechs as they surrounded Ekaterinburg, while Czar Nicholas and his family were prisoners there. He interviewed many Russians who were in the city when the imperial family was murdered. He got at first hand a story of the assassination, which appeared in the press. He is one of a few Americans who have stood in the very room where the last of the Romanoffs, who ruled Russia for 300 years, met his fate.

After the armistice in 1918, Colonel Johnson, with American, British, Japanese and Chinese engineers, was placed in charge of the Trans-Siberian railroad to transport supplies to Admiral Kolchak in his battle against the Bolshevik government. Kolchak swept on to within 200 miles of Moscow. Then the break came. After a decisive defeat on the Volga, Kolchak's forces were routed.

A great evacuation movement from European Russia set in as the Bolsheviks pushed on into western and central Siberia. Colonel Johnson and a few American and British engineers between Oursk and the front had charge of transportation of the retreating army. In September, 1919, they passed 45 trains eastward per day. Winter came on, demoralization grew, typhoid fever, smallpox and starvation added to their troubles. All allied forces were ordered out. On November 12, Colonel Johnson left Oursk with the last allied train and the Reds moved in the next day.

Five months later the last trains dragged into Vladivostok after a terrible winter as military forces have ever known. Locomotives broke down, food was lacking, disease raged, panic and demoralization reigned, coal mines were abandoned. Bolshevik forces hampered and hindered. Five months went by in that journey of 4,500 miles. This ended allied intervention in Siberia.

All left but the Japanese. They chose to remain and the bodies for transportation of allied efforts continued. Colonel Johnson stayed on for two years, having under his control American-trained Chinese and Japanese engineers. So much was accomplished in restoring the traffic on the Trans-Siberian that Colonel Johnson was decorated by the President of China and the emperor of Japan, as he had been by the French President and by Serbia.

MAKING GOOD IN A SMALL TOWN

Real Stories About Real Girls

By MRS. HARLAND H. ALLEN

(Copyright, 1924, Western Newspaper Union.)

THE CANDY KITCHEN

AMERICA'S notorious sweet tooth must be satisfied. And for the girl who knows what candies are America's "best sellers" and how to make those candies, there is money in helping to satisfy it. That's the declaration of imminent independence made by a small town girl who has proved her statement.

After ordinary candies, like fudge and taffy, that everybody makes," she asserted, "don't pay well. And with practically the same materials, you can make the expensive chocolate and bon-bons."

This girl has found the "best sellers" to be fancy chocolates and fudges, cream caramels, nut brittle and butterscotch. She maintains that it is better to specialize in only one kind of candy or, at most, only a few choice varieties, rather than to attempt too many kinds and have them imperfect.

The girl who proposes to run a "candy kitchen" in her home needs to consider three factors: instruction, equipment and supplies, and marketing. If she doesn't know how to make the kind of candy she wants to sell, she must, obviously, get some preliminary instruction, and she should procure a book that gives explicit directions for the making of the most intricate candies.

Her equipment will be a range, (preferably gas), a thermometer, scales, measuring cup, quart measure, spatula, cane knife, long sharp knife, wooden spoon, tablespoons, teaspoons, caramel pans, saucepans or candy kettles, double boiler, milk dropper, bonbon dipper, marble slab or table, or porcelain table, or large white tray. She may simplify or elaborate upon this equipment according to the extent of her business.

As for her market, the novice had best begin on a small scale, selling to personal friends and acquaintances. She will probably have plenty of orders for the holiday times, and she may avoid the anti-holiday slump and stimulate all-the-year-round trade by advertising the "Saturday Special," the box to take home for the Sunday treat.

She may advertise her strictly home-made wares in the local papers; and she may further announce them by word, accompanied by an attractive-looking plate of candy. In her window she should have boxes, wares neatly and attractively, and should adopt a trade name for use on the boxes and in advertising. She should never indicate broken bits or candy, crumbly fudges or truffled nut pieces in the boxes, but should save them in a "stock kettle" for later use.

If she wastes nothing—material, paper, string, boxes or time—she is sure to attain financial success through her "candy kitchen."

BAGGING BUTTERFLIES—IN BOTTLES

THAT dream of "picking dollars out of the air" may come true yet for the girl who becomes a butterfly collector.

Moreover, romance, as well as income may be her consideration. "The thrill of the artist at the discovery of a beautiful butterfly thing," says how a California girl, an inmate to the advantages of butterfly collecting, sums up the wonders of her work. And the more "rare and beautiful" the butterflies she captures, the greater her material returns, she might have added.

The butterfly chase takes place at night. But the butterfly collector must make daylight preparations; she must have secured the bulk of the trees on the territory "fitted" with a sweet and sticky substance, such as sugar water or diluted honey; and she must equip herself for the nocturnal chase with a wide-mouthed bottle containing cyanide, and a bottle lamp. After the captured "fly" as the technical trade dubs the beautiful creature, is dazzled by the lamp, it is dropped into the bottle to be asphyxiated.

After the night's catch, damaged and broken butterflies are again turned loose, while all perfect specimens are pinned in cork-lined boxes and shipped to the purchaser. Larvae and eggs may be kept in cold storage until spring, when their particular food plant will be available, or fed on forage crops which are grown indoors. The eggs of some butterflies will hatch within a few days, while others will not come out until spring. The collector should keep the eggs in ordinary glass test tubes, where she can examine them every day to see whether they have hatched. When they do hatch, the work-brood should be transferred to a jelly-glass tightly covered, and left until they attain a quarter of an inch in length. Later, they should be placed in larger fruit jars, or, if there are very many, into cardboard boxes. Several inches of dirt and leaf mold should be placed in the bottom of each receptacle, and fresh plant food should be put in every day and the old leaves taken out.

Butterfly markets are many. Colleges and schools, big museums, taxidermists, jewelry manufacturers, so-called people, hotels, department stores, and private collectors buy them either for scientific or display purposes.

The DAIRY

DAIRY BULL NEEDS EXTRA GOOD CARE

A little special care should be used in the feeding and general management of the dairy herd sire, in order to maintain his stamina and potency to the fullest degree. In the case of the mature bull, this necessitates keeping him in first-class condition as to flesh, but not overfat. Either fatness or thinness in flesh works against the maintenance of his best breeding condition and one is to be avoided as much as the other.

There should be an abundance of roughage in the dairy bull's ration. Clover hay and alfalfa are especially good; he may safely have all of either of these forages that he will consume. Corn stover and oats straw also are good feeds for the bull, though lower in nutritive values than the leguminous hays.

One of the main special requirements of the grain ration is that it be not too abundant; it is better to depend upon the forages for maintaining the animal's weight as much as possible. Many good dairymen give the herd sire the same grain ration as the cows receive, except less of it. The bull's grain needs will vary a great deal according to his size and physical condition, of course, though if he is getting plenty of good hay in addition, especially if it is clover or alfalfa, he will not need more than from four to eight pounds of grain daily. Shorts, bran and oats are particularly good concentrates to use in the grain portion of the bull's ration.

Here is a ration for mature bulls which has the sanction of usage on many farms: Three parts each of cornmeal, ground oats and wheat bran, and one part linseed meal, if desired, hominy may be substituted for the cornmeal.

Whether the herd sire should receive silage is a disputed point among dairymen. Many believe that it impairs the breeding abilities of the bull, though experimental evidence to support this belief is lacking. Other breeders safely feed silage to their herd bulls, though much less of it than the cows receive. Large feedings of silage to bulls results in greatly distending their paunches. Until he reaches serviceable age, there is no better feed for the young bull than grass, and he should be allowed to make as much of his growth on it as possible. On this point he will find the right kind of feed, and along with it will develop vigor and constitution as he would in no other way. Whatever the nature of the young bull, it should contain much protein to supply the needs of his rapidly growing body.

While careful attention needs to be given the bull's ration, proper feeding alone will not maintain the most desirable physical condition. Regular exercise is quite as important in preserving his vigor and potency.

Encouraging Favorable Market for Veal Calves

Here is something dairymen should encourage as a means of making a more favorable market for their veal calves: Meat experts of the federal government say that the practice of shipping veal without removing the hide or skin may many advantages. They explain that veal which does not have the skin removed until it reaches the retailer, which may be from five to ten days or longer after slaughter, still retains its "bloom" and the light pink color most desired by customers. The protective covering supplied by nature keeps the flesh from turning dark. Packers in New York and Chicago are now generally following the practice of selling veal with the skin on. This can be practiced in shipping veal—freely where veal calves are killed for meat on the farm or in small towns.

Kentucky Farmers Make Improvement in Dairies

Since April some 20 purebred dairy sires, ranging from 500-pound yearlings to grand sire emmentations have been brought into Graves county, Kentucky, as a result of the co-operative efforts of the Mayfield chamber of commerce and agricultural extension workers, according to reports to the United States Department of Agriculture. Several dairymen have been purchased by Graves county farmers. Time-storage sheds, built at shipping points in the county, have enabled farmers to purchase and hold time at convenient times for the benefit of their legume hay crops, and prices are being improved, and feed costs increased as a part of the county's program for economical and efficient dairy production.

Feed Calf Some Hay

For a young calf-mixed hay—clover and timothy or dried bluegrass—is the most desirable, but gradually, as the calf matures, clover hay may be fed with desirable results. Alfalfa hay of the best quality is exceedingly beneficial if limited to small quantities. At first, not more than one pound should be fed and the manger should always be cleaned and the unaten hay removed. Increase the hay ration until it reaches three pounds when the calf is three months of age.

Never Tease Bull Calf

A bull calf should never be teased or pushed around in friendly tests of strength. It must not be allowed to find out its strength but rather learn to respect the powers of its master. A playful bull calf may play later in life when it has become very strong. It might result seriously to the caretaker.

Good dairy cows furnish year round incomes.

JUNIOR AMERICAN RED CROSS ARMY 5,596,663

Children of 29,942 Schools Now Enrolled in Movement of Service to Humanity.

The American Junior Red Cross, which was organized as a children's auxiliary during war-time, especially to help the young refugees in Europe, and to exemplify in peace-time the Red Cross ideal of service, has now a membership of 5,596,663 in the schools of the United States and the insular possessions.

This Junior movement gives opportunity for the children to share in the Red Cross effort parallel to that of the parent organization. Juniors are therefore identified in varying degrees with the health services, disaster relief work, salvage and other suitable activities of value to the operations of the Red Cross.

It is a valiant host marching on under its "I Serve" banner in the cause of happier childhood everywhere and particularly wherever the American flag flies. The enrollment embraces 29,942 schools and 147,438 school rooms, a gain over 1923 of 8,855 schools and 22,414 school rooms. The year's gain in membership was 749,462 children or nearly 80,000 for each month of the school year.

The educational and social values of the Junior Red Cross movement is thus evidencing the firm and cordial endorsement of school authorities. The government has added the weight of recognition by extending the Junior Red Cross in the schools for American Indian children. The American Red Cross is also planning to develop the Junior program in 600 rural schools in isolated sections.

There is no abatement of the exchange of correspondence between schools in the United States and schools in the insular possessions and foreign lands. During the year the Junior Red Cross in part supported operations in twelve European countries. It is a potent influence for the cultivation of international good will and its example has been the means of stimulating the formation of Junior Red Cross societies in more than thirty countries.

RED CROSS RAISES $10,000,000 IN 21 DAYS FOR RELIEF

Terrible catastrophes, such as the Japanese earthquake, prove the wisdom of the people in maintaining the American Red Cross as their national and international relief agency. The readiness of the Red Cross for duty in the greatest of emergencies was also proved by test.

The record shows: Sept. 3, President Coolidge assigns the duty of raising $5,000,000 to the American Red Cross; Sept. 4, Red Cross Chapters in over 3,500 communities given fund allotments; Sept. 12, fund totals $5,563,000; Sept. 17, fund nearly $8,000,000 and President announces formal closing of campaign; Sept. 27, fund passes $10,000,000 mark.

In 21 business days the Red Cross doubly performed the duty entrusted to it—all the while keeping a steady flow of relief supplies going out from many Pacific ports to the stricken areas in Japan. Thus was the confidence of the American people in their Red Cross justified and the wisdom of Red Cross preparedness to cope with an unprecedented relief emergency confirmed.

Not the "Lumberjack" Dentist Had Thought

A certain dentist lived in Quebec who charged his patients not by the amount of work done, but by their capacity to pay.

One day a crew of lumberjacks came in from up the river with a boom of logs from the timber regions of the North. One of the men suffered from a toothache and consulted the dentist. After making an extraction the dentist regarded the logger for a moment and then, when the bearded man from the woods commenced to feel for his change, he asked him what he did for a living.

"Oh, I usually work around a mill," was the reply.

"Then your charge will be 50 cents," said the dentist.

The logger hauled from his pocket a huge wad of currency of staggering denominations and commenced to finger the bills. The dentist was amazed.

"I thought you said you worked around a mill," he said, as he rummaged in his cash drawer for change.

"Well, so I do," said the logger calmly. "I own the mill."

The dentist subsequently learned that the "poor logger" that he had treated for 50 cents was John Rudolph Booth, one of the richest men in Canada and outstanding lumber magnate of the continent.—Forbes Magazine.

Reached From Grave to Deliver Rebukes

The following is an excerpt from the will of a Wall street man, which was probated in the New York courts:

"To my wife, I leave her lover and the knowledge that I wasn't the fool she thought I was.

"To my son, I leave the pleasure of earning a living. For thirty-five years he has thought that the pleasure was all mine. He was mistaken.

"To my daughter, I leave $100,000. She will need it. The only good piece of business her husband ever did was to marry her.

"To my valet, I leave the clothes that he has been stealing from me regularly for the past ten years. Also my fur coat that he wore last winter when I was in Palm Beach.

"To my chauffeur, I leave my ears. He almost ruined them and I want him to have the satisfaction of finishing the job.

"To my partner, I leave the suggestion that he take some other clever man in with him at once if he expects to do any business."—Wall Street Journal.

The Cup of Paris

Paris, the great gay city, is contained within a cup, says a writer in the Continental edition of the London Daily Mail. You may discover it one day perhaps from a pleasant roof garden and be suddenly surprised to find the city so definitely contained. Wherever you will look there is just appear the soft green hills rising so serenely down upon the welter of life in the city below. You may even see the trees on the hills, so near are they.

We used to think the city was so big and spread so far, and the Place de la Concorde, what a mighty space it was! There even now we see the dome of the Pantheon, the towers of Notre Dame, the sudden smoky spout of the Eiffel tower. Gigantic things we used to think them. But now how easily they are held in the cup of the laughing hills!

Drowned Out Conscience

The preacher had told Uncle Ben that in moments of temptation he must listen to the still, small voice of conscience. And Uncle Ben, in the conduct of his second-hand store, tried hard to obey the injunction.

But when Mirandy Jones in a moment of unguarded enthusiasm, offered him $5 for a calico dress for which he hadn't expected to get more than $1.44, he couldn't withstand it. "Ah, hell," he confessed to the preacher afterward. "Ah couldn't help it."

"Didn't you listen to the voice of conscience?" asked the minister. "Ah listened hard," was the answer, "but honest Ah couldn't hear nuthin' fo' the sound of the cash-register."

Words That Work Hard

There are words it is almost impossible to avoid using, however carefully we may try to do so.

It is said that a quarter of the task of expressing oneself in the English language is borne by nine words—and, be, have, it, of, the, to, will and you. It is also asserted that these nine, with 34 other words, form half the words the average talker uses in ordinary conversation.

The additional 34 words are as follows: About, all, as, at, but, can, come, day, dear, for, get, go, hear, if, in, me, much, not, on, say, she, so, that, these, they, this, though, time, we, with, write, your, her, and, one.

All About Dogs and Cats

From a schoolboy's essay on dogs and cats:

"The dog is the commonest of all animals. Its legs are four and one tail of all sizes. Cats are very common in all large towns and streets, but dogs are more so. There is only three things wiser than the dog, which is ourselves, all monkeys, and all elephants. Don't tease cats, for firstly it is wrong so to do and second-cats have claws which is longer than people think. Cats have nine lives, but which is seldom required in this country because of Christianity."

"Why, man, that was his contribution to the cause."

Probably Girl Never

Forgot That Lesson

Stories have a way of accumulating about the memory of famous wits, and Dean Swift was no exception to this general rule, according to the San Francisco Argonaut. A hoard of Swift anecdotes, recently unearthed, includes the illustration of the dean's mania for closed doors. Swift's housekeeper hired his servants, but when they came into his employ he always told them there were only two rules to observe. One was always to shut the door after entering a room, the other, always to close the door after leaving the room.

"On one occasion a maid asked the dean's permission to attend her sister's wedding, when he not only gave his permission, but lent her a lasso upon which to make the journey, and another servant to accompany her. In the excitement of the moment the unfortunate girl forgot to close the door after her, and Swift, allowing time for her to get well away upon her journey, sent another servant post-haste to bring her back. In fear and trembling the poor girl presented herself before the dean, asking him what he wanted her for. 'Only to shut the door,' was the reply, 'after which you can resume your journey.'"

The Lasso

Our word lasso is from the Spanish lazo, meaning a snare. The lasso is a rope from 80 to 100 feet in length with a slip-noose at one end. It is used in the Spanish and Portuguese parts of America and in the United States and Canadian West for catching wild horses and cattle. When not in use the lasso, called "rope" in the West, is coiled at the right of the saddle in front of the rider. When an animal is to be caught the rider, galloping after it, swings the coiled lasso round his head and casts it straight forward in such a manner that the noose settles over the head or round the legs of the pursued animal, which is speedily brought down. In order to become skillful at throwing the lasso great practice is required; and, if possible, instruction by an expert.

WHAT IS PASTEURIZED MILK?

Pasteurized milk is milk that has been heated to from 145 to 150 degrees, and is held at that temperature for one half hour or longer.

There is a vast difference in pasteurized milk, however. Most pasteurized milk has been run thru a cream separator. At the Grayling Creamery we pasteurize whole milk only. Cream will rise on pasteurized milk the same as on other milk but may take a little longer to do so.

LONG CAREER ENDS

PARALYSIS FATAL TO VETERAN SENATOR—HAD UNDERGONE TWO OPERATIONS

WAS IN PUBLIC LIFE SINCE 1886

Served One Term in Congress Prior to Election as Senator—Leader in Upper House Since 1918

Boston—Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, senior Massachusetts senator, died at the Charlesgate hospital Sunday night. He was 74 years old.

Stricken with paralysis Wednesday the senator lingered for four and one-half days before the end came.

During the greater part of the time he had been in a state of coma, but after nearly 48 hours of unconsciousness he awoke for a time to take a little nourishment and recognized persons in the room.

Senator Lodge was operated on for gall stones at Charlesgate hospital on July 27. The operation was considered successful and his recovery from it remarkable in view of his age.

He returned to his summer home at Nahant after a brief stay in the hospital. He was operated on a second time, October 20, with the intention of preventing a recurrence of the conditions which led to the first operation. Again his recovery seemed complete.

Then followed the paralytic stroke. Senator Lodge had four years still to serve in the United States senate where he had represented this state continuously for 31 years. His place will be filled by appointment. Governor Cox having authority under a legislative act passed two years ago to name a successor until the next general election. That will not take place until 1926.

Mr. Lodge had served continuously in the senate since 1893, as Republican leader since August, 1918, and was one of the most prominent members of his party for a generation.

In 1886 he was nominated and elected to the national house of representatives, where he served six years before his election to the senate.

FOREST FIRES RAGE IN EAST

Timber in Several States Menaced by Long Drought

New York—With no prospects of relief from drought, and new blazes starting as others are brought under control, forest fires have been raging in seaboard states between the Canadian border and Maryland, and west as far as Kentucky. Two companies of Massachusetts militia were ordered out by Governor Cox to fight a fast spread fire in the Hoosac mountains, threatening North Adams.

Hundreds of fires are raging in the mountainous regions of the New York and New Jersey. At least 10,000 civilians are threatened, and villages of this state are adding fire rangers in combating the fires.

Kentucky, West Virginia and other states reported the worst fire conditions in years. In Pennsylvania mill-wide sheets of flames are cracking their unchecked way, with 40 fresh fires reported by the state department of forests and waters.

The drought in New York has continued for 31 days, surpassing by seven days a record that previously stood for 52 years. The dryness of the timber surpasses anything in the experience of the fire rangers, who say back fires have often resulted in starting other and more serious blazes.

FRANCE PARDONS U. S. PRISONER

Michigan Man Had Been Convicted of Arson 2 Years Ago.

New York—John L. Ayotte, of Cheboygan, Mich., the young American war veteran who has been serving a jail sentence in France since his conviction for arson in August, 1922, has been pardoned by President Doumergue, according to word received by Herman C. Huffer, Jr., former commander of the Paris post of the American Legion.

Ayotte was convicted of setting fire to the barn of his father-in-law. Because of his inadequate knowledge of the French language, he was represented to have confessed to arson and was sentenced to five years imprisonment.

Ambassador Myron Herrick secured his release.

Some Causes and Results of the Great Victory of the Republican Party.

At Smith, governor of New York, gave a free and most impressive demonstration of his popularity by overwhelming the plurality of 800,000. In winning, Coolidge carried the state and defeating Theodore Roosevelt for the governorship by about 150,000 plurality.

IV. In Illinois the Coolidge plurality was tremendous and the entire state Republican ticket was elected, but Governor Smith and Mr. Gehlman, and Charles S. Deneen's plurality for United States senator was cut down a lot by Albert Sangma.

Mixed results attended the active over to Bolshevism. He has secured imperial palace, including the former employer and his wife and seven children, has occupied all the former Czar's and has even taken the horses and motor cars of the deposed president.

IV. A Bolshevist rump cabinet set up by him has abolished forever the title of emperor and all other titles and has confiscated the palace in its name of the state. A further measure to agree to pay the former emperor for $500,000 annually as a private citizen and to appropriate $2,000,000 for the relief of the poor attendants of the Ross, who, although a member of the Democratic party, was elected by the Democrats of Wyoming to succeed to the office of her husband, the late Governor Ross, and in doing so she will take office as soon as the new legislature convenes in September. In Texas Mrs. Minnie Ferguson, Democrat, set out to vindicate the honor of her husband, who was offered the minor position of master of labor, which he refused, and he and his friends feel that he was unhealed.

South Dakota Mayor in Odd Prolamation

Summit, S. D.—An unusual "proclamation" was issued to residents of this village by Oat Melby mayor and placid merchant. This section of South Dakota has harvested one of the biggest crops in its history, and Mr. Melby, in a message directed to the farmers of his community, urged them to take advantage of bounteous crops and high grain prices to "revel" and "insure their stability."

"Now that we are harvesting the greatest crop in 20 years, with prices above normal, I wish to speak to you as man to man," Mayor Melby wrote. "I regret, but your obligations to your debts are like a hog jam. Every dollar paid lessens this amount, as it pays the merchant, the jobber, the manufacturer, the banker."

"Do not go into debt," Melby will kill the best individual in the community. Do not want your life out for the other fellow. Do not expect to act rich, quick. You cannot make any money unless you invest it in your own business. Do not give up if you own, of the, hogs and sheep require a little more than means, but they never will fail."

"Goat-home people are increasing you and your welfare. Stick to community, and you and your family will wear diamonds."

Court to Rule on Tax Public
Washington—It is reported that the government is preparing a case to determine the legality of a non-publication of income tax returns and decide the IRS law retroactively, then it might be the way for the disclosure of taxes paid for some years back. This disclosure was made the basis of "war fortunes." Attorney Stone plans to bring a test case and let the courts decide it.

Think before you Mail it

CONSIDER these things—before you mail your orders out of town. The dollar that you spend out of town is gone forever. The dollar that you spend at home—stays here and works. Whether it goes into civic improvements, via taxes, better schools, churches, streets—or whether it simply goes into more merchandise for your next needs—it circulates at home. Don't mail your order now until you have considered these things—and you won't mail it at all.

FARM BUREAU NOTES.

gallons of water before cutting. He plants large seed pieces if not whole seed, which is usually better. Before cutting seed he cuts off a quarter of an inch of the stem end to look for Fusarium Wilt which cannot be killed by soaking. He cultivates regularly and shallow to keep the potatoes growing steadily, and so they will not grow bad shaped.

How They All Got Big Yields.
Crawford is not a potato shipping county; yet, many farmers ought to raise an acre to sell in town and to resorters. The only profitable way to raise potatoes, or any other crop, is to get a big yield per acre.

In talking with many who have secured over 300 bushels per acre, I find that their secret of getting big yields was in filling the soil with plant food.

Growing That One Acre.
If I were a farmer in Crawford County, I would not grow more than an acre of potatoes. The rest of my land, and labor I would use for growing cow feeds to be fed to good cows. But, I would make that one acre a good one. I would manure an acre of good clover, alfalfa or sweet clover sod late in the fall, with fifteen loads of stable manure. I would carefully plow that acre just before things freeze up in the fall. Early next spring I would cover the acre with six or eight loads of very fine manure, carefully put on, and double-disk it in, double-disking north and south, then east and west. I would out on three sacks of acid phosphate and drag that in. Then I would use seed that had been treated as I have written above here. I would cultivate the potatoes by the marks, before they are up. I would then drag them several times, both before and after they are up. I will guarantee that you will be satisfied with the results.

344 Bushels to the Acre.
While talking with a gentleman from the western side of Burt Lake, Cheboygan county, he pointed to a nice sample of potatoes, and said, "Those are out of four acres that went 344 bushels per acre." When asked his method, what he told me was just about like what is written above. Other growers of big yields say just about the same.

Our Only Protection.
In big yields per acre for whatever crop we grow lies our only protection. Abraham Lincoln saw that long ago, and stated it in a speech. It is more profitable, and better for the farm and family, to get a big yield from one acre, than a small yield from ten acres.

Lessons Learned from the Show.
There was much to be learned from the 1936 Michigan Potato Show.

(1) Those who took prizes, and raised a large number of bushels per acre were, in almost every case, clean-cut, alert, wide-awake, neat, clean-looking men. They looked like men who could take up a new idea without being sickened over it. They looked like men who had not been to sleep on the job.

(2) Big yields were secured as stated above.

(3) Big yields were secured by sowing the potatoes one way only. Rows 32 to 34 inches apart, with hills 12 inches apart in the row.

(4) Lots of spraying was done. Jason Woodman said it.

One of the most interesting speakers at the show was Mr. Jason Woodman of Van Buren County. Mr. Woodman is an honest-to-goodness farmer. He lives on the farm where he was born. He does not intend to live anywhere else. He is a master farmer. He puts brains into farming. A graduate of the Agricultural College, and for eight years a member of the State board of Agriculture that controls that college, hair now silvered, he is a good type of a gentleman as a farmer, or as the farmer as a gentleman. Though, all his life, he has worn felt boots and overalls that work might require, when he goes to town you would not know but what he was a banker, or a university president. He maintains that the farmer should always think of himself as a gentleman, and a member of the choicest of occupations. He reads. He thinks. He goes among his neighbors and observes and tries to profit by his observations. He despises the hide-bound man who has gone to seed and can't, and who will not learn and progress. His speeches at the show in the afternoon, and at the banquet in the evening were rich and racy.

His Closing Remarks.
I wish every farmer could have heard at least the closing sentences of his banquet talk, and have heard him plead for us to plant more trees by the roadside; to pay more attention to making our farm homes attractive. He told how, as a boy of eight, he climbed trees to fasten the chain for his grandfather, so the oxen could tip the trees over, and be carefully dug out, enough to plant a mile each side of the road. I wish you could have heard him tell of the beauty of the driveway now, after fifty years under these enormous, arching trees.

His closing sentences were classic. They were the finest utterances of his life, in which he pictured to us how fully worth while it is for us to raise potatoes or anything else that we raise, not for the mere money they bring, but that what they bring, and the intelligence quickened in the raising may contribute to a higher and better standard of home life, of country life, and of individual living.

ALL WORN OUT?

SO WAS MR. PARKER WHO TELLS HIS EXPERIENCE.

Are you tired all the time; worn-out night and day? Does your back ache as if it would break? Do you suffer dizziness, headaches, rheumatic twinges or distressing urinary disorders? You have good cause, then, to be alarmed about your kidneys. Do as many of your townfolks recommend. Use Doan's Pills—a stimulant diuretic to the kidneys. This Grayling case is convincing:

H. E. Parker, proprietor of notion store on Spruce street, residence on Park street, says: "A dull ache thru the small of my back was the first sign of kidney trouble in my case. As time passed, my back became lame and sore and I had spells of feeling tired and worn out. My kidneys were weak and I had to get up two and three times during the night to pass the secretions. After using two boxes of Doan's Pills, from Lewis Drug Store, I was rid of the trouble." 60c. at all dealers. Foster-Milburn Co., Mfrs., Buffalo, N. Y.
